WHEAT

Estimates of Western Canadian Wheat
W. Banford, crop statistician, estimated the prairie wheat crop at 268,000,000 bushels, the provincial figure being as follows: Manitoba, 53,000,000 bushels; Saskatchewan, 130,000,000; Alberta, 105,000,000 bushels. The first official estimate by the federal bureau of statistics will be issued on Sept. 11.

Wheat Dipping Important

There are some points of fundamental importance on which all buyers are agreed. Nobody will buy wheat for four making which are rusty or tainted, or wheats which have been treated to any material extent. For their own good, producers and sellers generally should do nothing to weaken the confidence of buyers in the genuineness of the article offered. Any temporary gain is but a boomerang. The same thing may be said of any slack interpretation of grading rules, for in competitive markets the ultimate buyer has to reckon not on the best he may obtain, or even on the average, but on the worst he may have to accept on the contract he enters into. Nor will a buyer pay willingly a full time's price for wheat, even graded wheat, which in the country of origin has been liable to serious loss, but the best lots have been abstracted from the straight run for the benefit of home consumers of millers. There can be no weakening on this position because prices are low, as the position remains the same whether prices are high or low. —Edith Albert Humphries, L.L.B. Great Britain.

Europe Afraid of Cheap Wheat

It would appear that the principal importing countries, particularly of western Europe, have been making it very clear that they are not so much afraid of high priced wheat, but that they are desperately afraid of a flood of cheap, uncontrolled, competitive wheat and the inevitable result of such a flood on their own national agriculture. There is ample reason to believe that it is against cheap, uncontrolled wheat that the importing countries of the world have erected such elaborate barriers of tariffs, quotas and milling restrictions, the net result of which has been to make of the old market for wheat a thing of the past.—C. C. Brouillette, president Canadian Wheat Pool, at Regina.

Drouth and Grasshoppers

Damage Argentine Wheat
Damage to the Argentine wheat crop due to lack of rain was reported in recent cables from the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. The crop condition was regarded as mediocre, with immediate rainfall needed. The situation apparently has deteriorated since early August, when the need of rain was reported in the wheat and linseed areas, but stated that conditions were not considered serious. Grasshoppers continue to menace the grain crops. The payment of a bounty for grasshoppers as a control measure has made some progress, about six million pounds having been destroyed up to the end of July. It is important to kill as many as possible before the warm weather sets in, for they will move northward then and return later when crops are in a condition susceptible to severe damage. Drouth also is reported as causing serious damage to flax, oats, barley, and other crops. Livestock in some areas have

U.S.A. Calls for 5,000,000

Wheat Average Week
United States Department of Agriculture are undertaking a campaign to cut wheat acreage by 5,000,000 acres in plantings and a reduction of 124,000,000 bushels next year from the average production of recent years. Last year U. S. farmers produced 726 million bushels of wheat and received $177,000,000 for the crop. This year it is anticipated that for a 500 million bushel crop they will receive $125,000,000, or nearly double the price for last year. Secretary of Agriculture states that if all U. S. farmers plant the reduced acreage they stand to realize $450,000,000 for the crop next year.

After exhausting themselves in making all kinds of wild noises, the guests, numbering about fifty, were invited in, and spent the evening dancing at playing games. Later, a wonderful lunch was served by Mrs. Armstrong and daughters.

Mr. and Mrs. McDonald will make their home in the community.

A Woman at Banff

I know God fashioned little fields
So they would be
A comfort for old homely folk
And you and me
Small gardens with their fences
And their light
And their quiet to shut us
From the night
THIS He made with Glory in His work

This solitude, where Might Forever reigns
Molded the hills with glad
Rustling hands
Shaping the valleys for
Wide pasture lands
And so this solitude peaks
Forever bears
Old finger marks upon
Its rain marks

And every shining height
Reflects the glow
Of some far field
And over it he laid
With loving care
The mantle of His peace
Forever there

It looks as though Gray Wood has an unbreakable hold on the Barnsworth trophy. The veteran American motor boat racer successfully defended the cup early this week against Scott-Paine's challenger. The brilliant boat builder gave Wood a stiff run, and the defender knew he was in a race. Scott-Paine plans to return next year with a new craft and something sensational may be expected from the British engineer in view of the splendid showing made in his first attempt with a boat of radically new design.

PROTECT THE WEASEL

In certain districts south of the Red Deer river gophers caused heavy damage to grain crops this year, and the probabilities are that next year the rodents will be even more numerous and destroy a larger acreage of crops.

Wholesale trapping of the weasel, natural enemy of the gopher, is the reason for the tremendous increase in the number of gophers, and unless the weasel is protected the gopher will continue to multiply and ravage the farmers' crops.

Under the new government game regulations the weasel is protected. In the area between the Red Deer river on the south and the Battle river on the north. In view of the gopher situation here the weasel should also be given immunity from trappers and hunters in this district. Poisoning of gophers is costly and requires time in the farmer's busiest season. The weasel lives largely on gophers, and he affords the most effective means of keeping this destructive pest in check.

Protection of the weasel should be immediately urged upon the provincial government. If the weasel is not protected we can expect the gopher menace to increase.

Wade and Mrs. Crook, Bks. 6-1, 6-5. Summary: Brooks 3, Gleichen 1.

Notes on the Tournament
The Gleichen club has been flourishing this year. Softball, baseball, and golf have been going strong all season and little interest has been shown in tennis. In spite of this the Gleichen club entered the tournament, and all players thoroughly enjoyed the annual sporting event. Gleichen had a short number of players, and defeated a men's doubles match to Brooks and another to Bassano. Miss Grace Scheer filled in as a substitute for Gleichen and played in ladies' doubles and mixed doubles. Archie Johnston also substituted for Gleichen in a couple of matches.

Ernie Cully, of Milo, well known here as a tennis star, played on the Gleichen team, and won every match against both Brooks and Bassano. Cully was ranked as No. 3 player. He has played only a little tennis during the past few years, but he swears a wicked racket and with practice could probably beat the best of them in this part of the province.

Scotty McLaws suffered a sprained right arm Sunday morning. He was umpiring a game between Brooks and Gleichen teams when the step ladder on which he was sitting collapsed. McLaws fell on his right arm and twisted it badly. The injury put him out of the tournament, and he may not play any more this season. Gordon Smith also substituted for McLaws in the singles matches, defeating both

SMALL-DIAGNOSIS

The ease with which medicines can be obtained has placed within the reach of everyone a suggested remedy for all of the ordinary ills that fall to the lot of man. It might be said that the best that can be done for the majority of these remedies is that, in themselves, they can do no harm. This, however, is far from true for a real danger lies in misinterpreting certain signs and symptoms which may be and often are common to several disorders of the body.

This is especially true in the case of children. The child is entirely at the mercy of his well-meaning parents who take it upon themselves to prescribe for his every ailment. It is common, in many households, that when a child complains of abdominal distress or pain, an immediate rush is made for the castor oil bottle; without further questioning a dose is administered forthwith. The very high percentage of cases of acute appendicitis, with rupture of the appendix, that are admitted to hospital with a history of having received a dose of castor oil for abdominal pain bear witness to the disastrous results which the use of such laxative, of a kind which plays in this state of affairs. An acute appendix requires prompt medical care.

The laxative forces the contents of the upper bowel down upon the inflamed appendix. Thus, the first principle of treatment, which is rest, is violated, and the not unlooked for result is rupture of the appendix with the added danger of peritonitis.

The following case history obtained from the surgical records of a large hospital illustrates a somewhat similar point. A middle-aged man who had always enjoyed excellent health noticed a slightly-increased tendency to constipation. He consulted his doctor, who, after taking, at regular intervals, small doses of a laxative. Gradually his complaint became worse and, in addition to the constipation, he suffered slight twinges of pain. His implicit faith in the laxative, however, remained unshaken, and he used larger doses to obtain relief, but without success. Soon his condition became worse, a complete obstruction of the bowel ensued, and on consulting his physician, the diagnosis of cancer of the bowel was made.

The story of many illnesses, like the examples we have cited, bears witness to the tragedy of self-diagnosis and persistence in the use of some "remedy" which at best is only a palliative and which but delays the chance of effective treatment and probable recovery.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Brooks and Gleichen opponents. Gleichen had a fairly strong contingent in men's singles, and were expected to win most of their matches, but they fell down rather badly. H. C. Brown, No. 1 Brooks player, came back strong to beat out M. Yates after dropping the first set, and L. N. Whitehorn, Bassano's No. 1, defeated the Gleichen player in a similar manner. G. Yates was out-distanced by Phil Crook, of Brooks, who won in three sets, and Yates lost his other singles match to M. Haynes. Bassano, who played a good game to win in straight sets. The Yates brothers teamed up well in doubles play, overwhelming Whitehorn and Haynes of the local club with the loss of only two games, and ending out Brooks crack doubles team, Brown and Wade, in a hard fought match that went to 9-7 in the third set.

L. N. Whitehorn, Bassano No. 1 star, returned Saturday afternoon after the summer vacation. He was too late to play against Brooks, but got in the tournament against Gleichen and won two matches out of three.

Miss Florence Playfair, who is ranked No. 1 lady in the local club, played a good game throughout the tournament. She figured in five victories, losing only one match, the ladies' doubles with Brooks.

Incidentally, Miss Playfair was the only lady player in the tournament to appear on the courts in shorts.

NEW VEGETARIAN OF

There has been a great deal of effort made during the past few years on the Dominion Experiment Station to study the possibilities of introducing new varieties of vegetables that really have merits surpassing the ones in use for many years.

Corn is a comparatively easy crop to work with, and it is simply surprising the improvement made by plant breeding methods. For instance, Banting, Gold Nugget, Dorothy and Spangles Gold have taken the place of many of the older varieties, due largely to earliness, superior quality, and yellow color. Beans are still an important, snap and crop and it is most interesting to note that the well known Dave Wax bean that was looked upon as one of the best money making varieties has been superseded by an improved stringless strain.

If a tasty green flecked muskmelon is desired, the Early Knight variety will be found very acceptable. This variety matures very early and grows to a very desirable size for the ice cream trade. The flesh is a very attractive green, rich in manganese and with an exceptionally fine flavor. As an early maturing green flecked variety it is unsurpassed.

The value of early maturing tomatoes in certain sections is well known to those who have experienced a desire to grow the crop in the open garden and have the thrill of picking nice ripe fruit fresh from the plants. This is possible even in the short season sections if such varieties as Abel and Alacry are grown. Tomatoes fully ripened can be had in from 90 to 109 days from seed sowing, according to the performance of these plants at the Central Experimental Farm, where these varieties originated. According to a report received from the North Dakota Agricultural Experiment Station, Abel tomatoes led all other early maturing varieties for earliness and yield in 1932.

Where a rhubarb pie is relished or a sauce of that plant is looked upon with favor, Ruby rhubarb will be found to give the reddest product and require the least amount of sugar of all varieties obtainable.

L. N. Whitehorn, Bassano No. 1 star, returned Saturday afternoon after the summer vacation. He was too late to play against Brooks, but got in the tournament against Gleichen and won two matches out of three.

Miss Florence Playfair, who is ranked No. 1 lady in the local club, played a good game throughout the tournament. She figured in five victories, losing only one match, the ladies' doubles with Brooks.

Incidentally, Miss Playfair was the only lady player in the tournament to appear on the courts in shorts.

Rubber Dollars

How often have you and friend wife wondered how "the Joneses" seemed to do so much of their income? From remarks dropped by Jones, you're almost certain you earn as much as he. You're dead certain you and your wife are not extravagant or wasteful. Yet the Joneses do little things you can't afford--and have little things for which you can't spare the money. How come?

The truth is that the Joneses have a secret. They have discovered a way of putting rubber into dollars. Through the knowledge of this secret they have learned that a dollar can be stretched beyond its ordinary buying limits.

What is this secret? They read the advertisements!

In the advertisements in this newspaper, reliable merchants and manufacturers offer you their finest values. Before going to the store to buy, shop here first. Compare products upon you've found just what you want. Compare prices until you've pleased your purse. You'll save endless hours of weary walking. And you'll buy with the comforting assurance that every dollar has done its duty.

EIGHTEENTH INSTALLMENT

Joyce made a quick movement. "You," she said, "don't go in to that. Nell, I know, and I'll never forget it."

"But—but—Joyce, you are Prilla!" It was Robert Alnoworth speaking, and Joyce and Nell turned to him with a start. In their abhorrent interest in plotting together the mystery of Prilla, they had almost forgotten that he was there.

"Would you mind telling me?" Nell asked Joyce. "I thought you said that Nell, I know, and I'll never forget it."

Joyce looked at Robert thoughtfully. The air of rather superior innocence with which he had approached them was gone now, and she saw again the Robert Alnoworth she knew. He met her gaze frankly, with disarming friendliness.

"I'm sorry, Joyce," he said, "I didn't understand. Will you forgive me? He came over and held out his hand, smiling charmingly. He was like a little boy who, having shown his temper unreasonably, makes atonement of a loving parent regard.

"Who the devil are you, anyway?" asked Nell petulantly. "I don't want to, crab, Joyce. But wasn't it a bit thick, letting him hear all this?"

"Robert Alnoworth is the great novelist, Nell. Haven't you ever heard of him?"

Nell shook his head. "Never," he said. "What does he do besides write?"

"He comes into this, Nell, because I happened to have met him, because I knew him once more, because I happened to like him rather more than ordinarily."

Nell found his gaze on a distant pin stripe. "Do you mean that you are in love with him, Prilla?"

Instead of answering his question, Joyce said sharply, "I wish you'd make up your mind whether you want to call me 'Joyce' or 'Prilla'!"

Nell regarded her lit temper at once, however, and went on more agreeably. "Oh, Nell, I don't know anything any more."

"You are free, if you want to be, Joyce," said Nell, drawing his lips together in the attitude of severe restraint that he assumed—when Prilla had especially hurt him.

"What about Alnoworth?" he turned to the other man. "Did you and Prilla fix this all up between you?"

Before Robert could answer, Joyce broke in. "Oh, no, no, Nell, please! It wasn't quite so beastly as all that. Nothing had been fixed up—we had simply, well, fallen in love, and there the matter stood." She looked at Robert and was hurt to find an amused smile lingering about his eyes.

Joyce felt a profound shame creep over her. Nell had just told her she was free, and yet Robert sat quietly, saying nothing, teasingly digging holes in the soft ground with his sliding crop. Her husband was, in a sense, offering her to her lover, who was making no move to claim her. Was she being rejected by both men? Her nerves, strung tautly under the strain of the entire morning, collapsed utterly, and she felt that she would grow hysterical if she sat there another moment.

She sprang to her feet. "Well, now that I've unmasked before both

I've gotten things into such a mess!"

It did her good to have some definite work to do. In less than an hour she had bathed, dressed, and packed two boxes with Prilla's simple clothes and belongings.

"It seems like stealing to be taking them," she thought, worriedly. "Yet what can I do? Nell doesn't want Prilla's clothes—they won't do any good if I leave them. They have to find some sort of work right away, and I can't apply for it unless I'm decently dressed. Of course, I won't take any of Prilla's jewelry or anything of real value."

Roxie met her at the foot of the stairs. "Excuse me, ma'am, but Mr. Nell said he was waking up after a time and we should have your dinner ready."

"Very well, Roxie, just serve it quickly in the dining room, please. And tell Sam I want to speak to him."

Once Joyce had decided to leave, she felt she could not go quietly again. She could not endure looking about Nell Packard's house and reflecting that she would probably never see it again. Her only salvation was in acting at once. She was grateful for the nonchalance with which Sam received her orders, and for the lack of demonstration on the part of Roxie.

Writing on Nell's bed, difficult. "Dear Nell," she wrote. "I'm going away—forgive me, but it seems the only thing to do. I know how you feel about facing me after all we've been through today. Well, you wrote me that you would 'camp than she supposed. After installing herself in a cheap rooming house under the name of "Florence Wilson" (to make it easier perhaps for Nell to get his divorce) she set out to find employment.

She took to reading the want-ads in the daily papers, but she could get up no interest in the kind of work they offered. She found that the luxury of living as Mrs. Nell Packard and had sapped her courage, and left her less able to face hard work and uncomfortable living conditions.

Her room filled her with horror, she was acutely unhappy every moment she had to spend in it.

She began to wonder what she would do when all her money was spent.

Somehow, she let her mind open itself to thoughts of Robert Alnoworth. She had tried to banish him but could not quite; persistently the thought of him would thrust itself up, only to be persistently ignored.

She had but one conclusion to reach, and that was that he had left her, that he had abouted himself lacking in chivalry and courage, that perhaps . . . he . . . did not . . . love . . . her.

To Joyce was too hot bitter for tears, too bitter for complaint. She could not hold her head up under the shame of it.

When the hundred dollars was nearly gone that Joyce was seized with a feeling of sudden panic, she shook off her lethargic mood, and striking out wildly for employment, seized upon a position as file clerk in a large paper concern. The work was not to her taste, but it was, or less profitable, but in her disorganized state its very duplicity was beneficial to her. She kept to herself, finding that the other girls were suspicious of her finer clothes. It amused her to wonder what they would think if they knew how she really got them!

One day, less than a week after she had begun her job, Joyce was called to the office at five-thirty in company with two of the other girls, with whom she was exchanging desultory remarks, when a familiar voice made her tremble.

"Oh, Mrs. Packard, Mrs. Packard!" It was Sam, calling to her from the Duessenberg, which he steered quickly to the curb and stopped. "Ge, I'm glad I found you!" He was out in a moment and holding the door for her, and Joyce, too befuddled to think of the amusement of the office girls, or even to remember to bid them good bye, climbed in.

Sam started the car before he spoke further, and Joyce suddenly overcame, burst into tears and began sobbing uncontrollably.

"There, there," Sam was saying. "It's all right, Ge, I'm glad I found you!" . . . and then in a minute, when Joyce was calmer, "What do you want to get your bags first?"

"Oh, Sam, I mustn't go back to Manitoba!" Joyce was crying. "I'm surprised that I just naturally got in the car, but I'm not going to be weak-minded as you think! If you don't mind driving me around for a little, until I get control!"—she sobbed afresh.

Joyce hesitated when she reached that point. She wanted to tell Nell how awfully much she appreciated his kindness, his kindness, to Prilla, but she felt she simply couldn't tell herself on the subject. So she said briefly: "I'll get in touch with you before long, Nell, because you'll be wanting to get a divorce and I shan't stand in your way."

Sam was warming up the motor of the Duessenberg; she could hear purring under the long French windows.

Joyce flung herself down on theavenport and stifled her sobs in a big "Oh, Dickie," she said as a soft little nose inhaled into her elbow-clenched palm. "Why should I feel so utterly wretched about this only decent thing I've done since I've been in this house? I don't want to go, Dickie, I really don't want to leave it all!"

Sam took her to the Y. W. C. A. in which she had previously stayed in San Francisco, but she found that there only one slight feeling, that if Nell pressed Sam very hard he might let her whereabouts, and she preferred to remain in hiding.

"I know Nell will feel that he should make every effort to find me," she thought. "But it'll be better if I don't succeed."

Joyce found it harder to get a job

"What do you mean, weak-minded? Excuse me, Mrs. Packard, but I think there's a tall lot of explaining to be done somewhere!"

Sam suddenly reddened, and looked at her with a mixture of apprehension and determination. "Maybe it's none of my business, and all that, but—see, I like you and I'm sure you're a good girl."

Mr. Packard took too much—He stopped confusedly, and then he started to say something, but he was interrupted by a perplexing question.

"Why didn't you want to come home when Miss Abbott told you Mr. Packard's mother had died?"

Joyce stared at him in such honest bewilderment that he was impressed. "Why, what on earth are you saying, Sam? What do you mean? Her mother died?"

"—since I left? Of course I didn't know! I haven't seen a soul from Manitoba! Tell me—please!" Nell's mother—she knew how fond he was of her—how he would grieve! Of course she must go to him at once.

"Oh, Sam!" Joyce's misery shook her words through with pain.

A MESSAGE TO THE Alberta Grain Growers

The Alberta Wheat Pool closed its books on July 15th for the 1932-33 business year. The organization is pleased to state that the volume of business transacted during the year was the largest. Pool elevators have ever enjoyed.

The natural conclusion is that the thousands of grain growers who have given their patronage to this grower-controlled co-operative are appreciative of the services rendered and are determined to build up within the boundaries of this Province a strong and aggressive organization on a co-operative basis.

The organization invited and would appreciate during the new crop year a continuation of the patronage so generously extended in the past. Those who have never before utilized Pool elevator facilities are invited to do so with the assurance of the careful, courteous, and efficient attention will be given to all business entrusted to it.

The welfare of agriculture to Alberta would suggest that all grain growers should be concerned in the upbuilding of a truly co-operative elevator organization, owned and governed by the grain growers of the province and interested primarily in the welfare of Alberta Agriculture.

of you" she cried, her voice trembling close to tears. "Goodbye!"

"There, dear, I'll go back with you. No, no, please don't. Please leave me alone. For heaven's sake, Nell, let me be for just a little while!"

He fell back, struck by the vehemence of her tone, and she sprang lightly in the saddle and galloped off.

Once in her room, Joyce looked to her and saw herself down on a couch, she felt crushed and hurt.

Nell was sitting over her shoulder, and she had found herself Prilla Packard. Her disillusionment about Robert Alnoworth was so profound that she felt she had lost all faith in humanity.

Every one seemed less noble, all life took on a meaning and a ruthless form. Where could she go to find beauty, to find truth, to find fineness, if not in this man whom she had so ardently worshipped?

The he should have regarded the situation at first as one to be treated with cynical levity was a fault that seemed to her graver than the grave.

She did not . . . want . . . Robert Alnoworth . . .

When she woke it was a cool or cold, so she was shivering. As she collected her thoughts she noticed an envelope lying on the floor near her door. I recognized a note from Nell, and she read:

"Dear Joyce: 'When I got back I found a message on my table from Mother. She's not seriously ill, but feeling badly and wanted to see me. I shan't tell her anything about you, of course. We talk everything over, I thought it might be better if I'd camp out somewhere else tonight. Please go to bed and get a good rest. I'll see you tomorrow.' Nell."

Joyce read this over several times, almost incomprehending. At last, however, she knew what she must do. She knew she must go away—that it was the only thing for her to do.

"I've been wrong to stick it out this long," she thought. "No wonder out somewhere else tonight! I quite understood. Please don't think blame you—all the fault is mine from beginning to end—but I could not bear to be the cause of making your home repellent to you. Nor could I bear to see you being embarrassed and pretending that you wanted me here when you didn't! You can see there's nothing else for me to do. I'm not going to touch with you before long, Nell, because you'll be wanting to get a divorce and I shan't stand in your way."

Joyce hesitated when she reached that point. ## OBITUARY

Havelock Henry Spicer, postmaster at Duchesne for many years, died early Friday morning, Sept. 1, at the Bassano Hospital. Deceased was born June 1866, at Advocate, Nova Scotia. In 1888 he went to Vancouver and became prominent in the lumber business, owning a large shingle mill, and was the first man to ship a trainload of shingles to the east. Later he moved to Oyen, Alta., and in 1920 came to Duchesne as manager of the Crown Lumber Co. In 1923 he became postmaster at Duchesne.
